Socialism.

CLIO, ARK., February 10, 1906. Ed. Register:-Cardinal Gibbons' rgument against Socialism would certainly be unanswerable if the Cardinal had stated the case properly; but like almost all such arguments, Socialism is never approached. On the contrary, a straw man is set up and then the creator of the straw man proceeds to demolish his own handiwork, leaving the real thing untouched.

The Cardinal supposes something that is not, and never has been, contemplated by Socialists, viz: the division of capital. Let us suppose a case: John Doe, Richard Roe, yourself and a number of others are employed on a large farm owned by John D. Vandergould; and suppose you looked through the books and found that while Mr. Vandergould received five dollars revenue from the farm for every employe daily, he returned to said employe only one dollar in wages. Then suppose you found, on further investigation, that Vandergould spent all his time in Europe and that you seven years, and it has always and your fellows really did all that was done to create the five dollars each, and that if you owned the farm the full earnings thereof would be yours. Then suppose that further investigation revealed that further investigation revealed that further investigation revealed the most important fact of all, that by uniting your efforts you could purchase the farm and after a few years have it paid for and free appears it will prevent the attack. For sale by Arcadia Valley Drug from debt, and receive, instead of Co. one dollar per day, the full earnings of the farm, which amounted to five dollars each. Don't you to five dollars each. Formerly the world thought it couldn't get on without kings and emperors, but Jefferson thought that by co-operation in politics we could eliminate the crowns; and Jefferson was right. Now many of us think the kings and captains of industry can be successfully eliminated, and we are going to make the experiment. We are opposed by many honest people; so was Jefferson. Co-operation in industry, or in other words, the industries democratically managed for the benefit of all. All who? from its genuine artistic merits, it
